ONE LAST TIME . . .

After spending the last four years at Murray State and The Murray State News, I have finally reached the same conclusion that hundreds of students have achieved: graduation. I've done a lot during my time at Murray State, and making this magazine has been one of the brightest moments in my academic career. A final project with no grade, something to leave behind for future students to gander at, a temporary piece of my legacy for you to enjoy.

With this being my second time creating this magazine, there was only one direction we could go: up. Better designs, better stories, better us. Finishing this magazine during my last two months at Murray State made this a heartfelt project for me and the rest of the team who made it a reality. Every photo and story written wouldn't be possible without the help of my crew, and it is with an excited heart that I pass the torch onto the 2026-2027 News team.

A mozzie stick to you all.

0-5 POINTS

THE ACADEMIC WEAPON

You prioritize school over socialization, and that's not always a bad thing, but don't forget to enjoy the small moments when possible. Making friends and hanging out are just as important as good grades. Don't finish your degree with nothing but a diploma to show for it.

6-10 POINTS

EXHAUSTED WARRIOR

Whether it's because of late-night study sessions or bad sleeping habits, you thrive on naps and on turning things in right before the deadline. While there might be a thrill in turning in last-minute assignments, it's important to create a healthy sleep-study schedule to ensure burnout doesn't occur. There is more to campus than your twin-sized bed.

11-16 POINTS

CHARISMATIC KING

You enjoy spending time with your friends and getting as involved as you possibly can across campus. You want to do it all! Just make sure you don't spread yourself too thin and lose track of time for your classes in the process. There is nothing wrong with taking on a lot, just know where the limit is.

17-21 POINTS

THE PARTY ANIMAL

You always know where the parties are going to be, and thrive on the weekends while surrounded by friends. Kudos to you for all the fun, but don't forget about what you've come to college for, and when you are out partying away, be safe.

THE HOUSING SYSTEM

WRITTEN BY
ROGERS

Living in a university dorm is not as glorious as it sometimes appears in the movies, but with the right knowledge and some careful preparation, it can be an amazing experience that kicks off your time at Murray State.

Life on campus is what you make it, and living in a residential college that checks off all the boxes on your list is a good way to start an enjoyable academic year.

First-time freshmen planning to live on campus are limited to the residential colleges unless they are eligible for specific exceptions, such as marriage, commuting or online-only status. With this in mind, there are seven dormitories available for incoming students to choose from.

There are three different types of University housing open to select from: communal bathrooms, Jack and Jill rooms and private doubles. Each comes with perks and drawbacks depending on what you need from a dorm room.

The residential colleges with communal bathrooms are Hester Residential College and Elizabeth Residential College, both of which have nine floors and two communal bathrooms per floor, cleaned and restocked daily. Floors two through four are reserved for male students and five through nine are for female students. Although the rooms are smaller compared to some of the other options, they offer students cozy lobbies and study rooms on various floors to utilize and enjoy as they please.

"I like living in a communal dorm," Jade Duff, a sophomore television production major, said. "I don't have to buy toilet paper or other cleaning supplies for the bathroom; it's just one less thing I have to worry about."

For students who want a bathroom attached to their bedroom, the first options are in the Jack-and-Jill-style dorms: Hart Residential College, RH White Residential College and the upperclassmen-only Regents Residential College. These are rooms that share a bathroom with their suitemates, their neighbors on one side. An important note about Regents and RH White is that they are separate from separate male and female students, except for the first floors, which are mixedgender.

"I like Richmond, it's chill," Ella Cash, a junior veterinary technician major, said. "The other people who live in the building are very welcoming. I like that I rarely have to wait to do laundry, and it's conveniently on every floor."

Getting into the residential college of your choice depends on the time of your housing application completion and availability after the upperclassmen students select or renew their housing selections. Each dorm has a lively community and council to ensure the community is aware of upcoming events and changes throughout campus and offer students the opportunity to get more involved with their residential colleges. Room assignments are typically released in July for incoming freshmen.

the residential side of campus and are located on the academic side, near the Curris Center. In terms of pricing, these three dorms are the lowest-priced option, with rooms slightly larger than those in Elizabeth and Hester.

The last and most expensive options come in the form of double rooms with private bathrooms, which can be found in these three dorms: JH Richmond Residential College, HC Franklin Residential College and Lee Clark Residential College. On the newer end, in terms of amenities and structure, these dorms offer spacious rooms with private bathrooms for their students, with wings that

CELEBRATE TRADITION!

At Murray State University Written By: MacKenzie Rodgers

Shoe Tree

Standing near the center of the Quad is the Shoe Tree, which commemorates the couples who met at Murray State. “Sole” mates hang up their shoes on the tree. Two trees preceded the current one. The first was struck by lightning, and the second had broken limbs. This tradition is a cherished one within the University community, later capturing attention outside the University as well through the Danish music group Lukas Graham, who featured the tree in their 2018 “Love Someone” music video.

Almost Midnight Breakfast

A relatively new tradition, Almost Midnight Breakfast invites students into Winslow Dining Hall the night before Finals Week to destress with delicious breakfast staples like pancakes, bacon, scrambled eggs and more. Faculty, staff and administration volunteer to dish out meals and encourage students as they get ready for their upcoming finals.

Racer One

Since 1976, every home game football touchdown has been accompanied by a celebratory lap made by Murray State's Racer One horse, guided by a student jockey. There have been many “Racer Ones” since the tradition began.

The original horse, Violet Cactus, served as Racer One for eight years, later being buried adjacent to Roy Stewart Stadium. The current horse is Vegas Impulse and is tied with Violet Cactus for the longest running Racer One spot.

Homecoming at Murray State wouldn't be the same without Tent City. The tailgating festivities, which began in 1989, precede the Homecoming football game, with over 50 tents lining the track at Roy Stewart Stadium. Thousands of Racer fans and alumni gather and peruse the tents before the game.

One of the most beloved campus events at Murray State is All Campus Sing. Since 1958, members of the music fraternity Sigma Alpha Iota (Iota Beta chapter) have hosted the annual event, in which student groups compete through choreographed musical performances on the steps of Lovett Auditorium. Each year, eager spectators set up across the Quad to watch the festivities, with proceeds supporting music programs for schools in underprivileged communities.

FIND YOUR CROWD

Written by:
Avery Poston

Despite Murray's small-town atmosphere, countless organizations, clubs and hobbies can fill your time between classes and coursework. Extracurricular and community involvement are one of the best ways to make the most of your time in college, allowing you to make connections with peers you wouldn't have found otherwise.

At Murray State alone, there are over 150 different registered student organizations, ranging from Student Government Association and Model UN to the Rowing Club or Greek Life.

With so many opportunities for student involvement, nearly every academic discipline hosts one or more extracurriculars that pair students with like-minded peers and offer experiences that cannot always be found within the classroom, such as: guest speakers, professional connections, yearly conferences and much more. These groups are great for building lasting relationships with peers and faculty within your major while adding on to your resume as your college career continues.

"For the past three years, I have been involved in the Honors Student Council, SGA and my fraternity. I would say that through these leadership opportunities across those clubs, I have really grown as an individual while I've been at Murray State," said SGA president Cesar Villeda.

Besides the countless academic opportunities at Murray State, several religious groups on campus like 212 Campus Ministry, Baptist Campus Ministry, Wesley Foundation and many more, offer weekly meetings and campus events.

One of the best parts of being involved on campus is that most organizations are not mutually exclusive, meaning you can be a part of as many clubs as your heart desires. The keyword being most, sometimes organization meetings have a timing conflict, or an organization may have a greater level of commitment, or it's related to Greek Life. Just make sure you don't overextend yourself and don't be afraid to set reasonable boundaries for your time.

Outside of the University, there is a whole new world of groups and events that the community hosts. At times, locals fear that Murray State is the only focal point attracting attention; however, the surrounding area offers abundant involvement opportunities.

In the surrounding area of Murray, students branch into all sorts of outside commitments, like volunteering, entertainment and much more. Additionally, Murray has begun expanding the available spaces for student gatherings; this includes the Calloway County Public Library, Historic Downtown Murray, Corvette Lanes, Chestnut Park, Central Park and several local restaurants. More seasonally, the City of Murray hosts local farmer's markets, parades and special events that bring the community together during times of holidays and celebration.

Regarding volunteering in the area, groups like Need Line, Soup for the Soul, Journey Bags and Humane Society of Calloway County invite students from Murray State to reach out and find how they can be of service.

Looking at other commitments in the community, artistic creativity blossoms through events hosted by Playhouse in the Park and Wits End, a local theater and music store, respectively.

"The community of Murray is a beautiful one," Tim Peyton, co-owner of Wit's End with his fiancé Lu Colby, said. "It's a community made of many communities that wonderfully intertwine; they respect and look after one another to make sure we can all still come together on any given day to support one another."

In "The Finest Place We Know," Murray State offers numerous opportunities to get involved and expand your circle. Whether you're interested in clubs where you're heavily involved with a variety of leadership roles, or organizations where you're passively involved and attend once a month, Murray has everything in between. A portion of the value of pursuing a college education is access to resources like these organizations, so make the most of your education and get involved.

You?

Life, they say, is a journey. Some of us have a sense of peace about the world, and some of us are searching for answers. Some need help, and some can give it.

Wherever you are on the path, one of us is probably there, too. If you have doubts and questions, you'll find a kindred spirit among us. If you have an insight that might help, we need your wisdom. If you want to help those in need, roll up your sleeves and join in.

The road to peace and understanding is a long one, and it's nice to travel with friends. If you'd like some company, we're right on the corner. Drop by and take a little stroll with us, or take a virtual look on Facebook or our website.

AINSLEY BEATTY

College is more than simply going to lectures, taking exams and stressing over assignment deadlines. It’s about making memories and connections — and capturing moments with friends, likely to post on social media. Murray has some amazing photo opportunities for every occasion, both on and off campus. Here are some of the best spots to get Instagram-worthy photos.

Campus is the first place to look when taking pictures. The red-brick buildings across campus make great backdrops. From the outside of your residential college to throughout the academic buildings, you can find a potential photo spot anywhere. The MSU gates have to be one of the most iconic structures on campus. Standing at the corner of 15th Street and Olive Boulevard, the gates are a staple for photos of any kind.

Venturing a little further into the Quad, the first place to check out is Lovett Auditorium. With the wide steps, towering pillars and carved detailing around the entrance, it’s a classic backdrop for both formal photoshoots and casual pictures with friends.

The MSU Science Complex stands across 16th Street from the quad and is home to some of the newest and largest buildings on campus. In the middle of the complex is the Jesse L. Jones Clock Tower — the breezeway underneath is a highlight for picture taking.

Moving off campus, the town of Murray, while small, holds many places to explore. Downtown Murray is the perfect spot to spend an afternoon walking around — browsing shops and snapping photos while you're at it. Downtown is home to a dozen historic buildings and over seven murals that are waiting to be photographed.

If you're looking for a more nature-focused location, look no further than the Murray State Arboretum. Filled with a pond, pavilions and walking trails, there are a plethora of opportunities to take pictures that change with the seasons.

Murray has many more photo-ready places waiting to be discovered. As a new student, don't be afraid to explore and meet people — Murray is a small, but caring community that loves MSU students.

DECK OUT YOUR DORM!

Written by:
Gray Hawkins

Murray State's "What to Bring/What NOT to Bring" page is certainly the place to go if you want to know what is prohibited in the dorms, but as extensive as the list is, there are some things you won't know just how much you need until you're here. Here is a list of nine items to consider bringing in the fall, all suggested by Murray State class of 2027 students.

A fan

Whether you prefer a wide-reaching and slim pedestal style, a bulky but powerful high-velocity style or a small personal style to fit on your desk, you are going to want some sort of fan. August in Murray has an average high of 88.8 degrees, according to murrayky.gov, but it's not just the early fall semester you need to worry about; the residential hall heating systems tend to overcompensate through the inconsistent winter and early spring forecasts.

Kelsi Earles, a freshman graphic design major and resident of Hester Residential College, said her tower fan has been a lifesaver. Earles and her roommate didn't bring it from home, but they bought it on move-in day.

"When we first got here, the room was already so hot," she said. "We decided to grab a fan at Walmart really quick, and it has been a necessity all year."

Washer sheets

Speaking of laundry, you will want to find a detergent option that's cost-efficient and long-lasting. Li Irvine (they/them), a freshman aquatic biology major and resident of Franklin, recommended washer sheets over liquid detergent because they are more portable and take up less space.

"It's very nice because you just take one, put it in the bottom of the washer, put your clothes in and you're done," they said. "The ones I use are from Trader Joe's, but I know the Arm and Hammer brand is more accessible."

Washer sheets are a good eco-friendly option for a typical load of laundry, but fair warning: a test conducted by consumerreports.org reported that washer sheets tend to underperform against heavy-duty stains, especially coffee. Despite not being the best choice for big stains, washer sheets are still very convenient for regular laundry use, Irvine said.

Extra bedding

Murray State's packing list already suggests bringing two sets of sheets, but it's easy to fall into the complacency of a one-and-done mindset—especially if you haven't been responsible for your own laundry until now.

Presley Billingsley (they/she), a freshman sociology major and resident of Franklin Residential College, said she wishes she had an extra bedding set because of how long it takes to get them back from the washer and dryer cycles, especially when you have to wait your turn among other residents.

"One of my friends has two sets, so when she goes to wash one, she replaces it immediately," Billingsley said. "When the first one gets cleaned, she puts it back in the box for next time. I'll be doing that for next year for sure."

Extra clothing hangers

You need enough clothes to last the semester, but you don't have room to bring your entire wardrobe. The dorms' modest closet space can hold a reasonable amount of outfits as long as you bring enough hangers to utilize the space.

Irvine said that while they packed lighter than most students, they still needed more hangers than they brought.

"I didn't really think through the fact that I would get more clothes in college than what I brought with me," they said. "In general, I'd recommend bringing five more than you think you'll need."

If you can't get more hangers from home, cheap packs for tops and pants are easy to find on Amazon or at Walmart.

Cookware and dishwashing supplies

Picture this: you’ve lost track of time while playing a video game or powering through a long assignment, and your stomach growls. You’re in the mood for something more filling than a granola bar or bag of chips, but the clock reads half past 10 p.m. Even Winslow and Fast Track are closed, so your options are to splurge on DoorDash delivery, drive off campus if you can or go to bed hungry. Keeping a couple of plates and forks handy is a good way to avoid this late-night ultimatum.

A good set of dishware goes a long way. Earles said she ended up eating in her dorm room more often than she expected and would recommend bringing some bowls, utensils and dish soap. If there’s a good chance you will want to cook for yourself now and then, consider buying your own cookware. The residence halls will have some equipment available for checkout, but those won’t always be available— or well cleaned— in dorms with multiple kitchens.

A dehumidifier

Humidity isn’t just uncomfortable; it can be unsanitary. Mold growth can thrive in a small, humid dorm room. In 2016, the National Center for Biotechnology Information found that 36% of surveyed students reported signs of residential dampness, including “excessive humidity ... visible mold ... history of water leaks ... and ... mold odor.” For both health and comfort, Billingsley recommends getting a dehumidifier. “I have loved my DampRid dehumidifier,” Billingsley said. “It’s helped a lot with the mugginess and smell of the dorms.”

DampRid is a name-brand dehumidifier with several dorm-friendly options that won’t take up limited outlet space, including hanging absorbers for closets, refillable or disposable tubs and scented absorbing crystals.

An ottoman

Depending on your room’s layout and how much you have to unpack, you might find yourself raising your bed frame to its highest rung. This is a great way to maximize your space, but it adds an extra step every time you have to get on or off your bed. That’s why Irvine said their ottoman is one of the items they have found most useful. “I can use it to get on and off my bed easily, and there’s storage in it for extra sheets and towels,” Irvine said.

If you don’t have an ottoman you can borrow from home and want to buy one, it’s important to remember that cheap options aren’t always best. A $7 ottoman from Five Below won’t last nearly as long as a $20 to $25 one from Walmart or Home Depot, especially when you put weight on it by stepping on and off.

A desktop charging station

Make a mental list of electronics and appliances you and your roommate want in your room— a fridge, a microwave, at least one device charger each, maybe a TV if there’s room— and you may start to worry if there are enough outlets in your dorm room to get by. You may find an extension cord conveniently laying around the house, but given their bulky design and how they’re intended for temporary use only, there may be better options for you. Earles said she prefers a desktop charging station to supplement her limited access to outlets. “I use it for literally everything,” Earles said. “It’s really convenient, especially when you have a lofted bed, to not have to plug everything into the outlets that are on the wall.”

Moving bags

No matter what you bring to college, you need a way to carry it here and back over breaks. Some people prefer disposable options like trash bags and cardboard boxes, while others use collapsible wagons or bins. It all comes down to what can fit all your belongings without occupying more space than you can afford to lose.

Billingsley said the best option for her has been moving bags. “They’re much easier to deal with than totes or cardboard boxes,” Billingsley said. “I keep them under my bed as storage.” On Amazon, multipacks of heavy-duty moving bags range in cost starting around $25 for four or more bags.
